Fund managers' commentary

Markets experienced another positive quarter, with Europe and emerging markets leading the way. US equities endured a relatively weak quarter as scrutiny increased over the level of spending by the world's largest firms on the roll-out of their AI strategies. A weaker US dollar also reduced one traditional support for US market exceptionalism and encouraged some reallocation into cheaper international markets.

In Europe and parts of emerging markets, returns were bolstered because several sectors performed strongly in tandem. Banks benefited from an improving interest rate backdrop, defence stocks continued to attract flows with security high on the agenda, while energy companies were supported by rising commodity prices. The weaker US dollar also added a currency tailwind for many non-US assets, amplifying relative returns for UK-based investors.
