Monthly Commentary

What happened in markets?

Global equities made a new all-time high in July, shrugging aside ongoing tariff negotiations and subdued economic data. US equities benefitted from a strong second quarter earnings season for the Mag-7, with Microsoft the latest company to reach a market cap of $4trn. In sterling terms US equities rose nearly 6% over the month, with European equities returning just 0.9%. Commodities outperformed gold and credit spreads narrowed further.

Sterling gave up some of its recent strength following Labour's failure to push through significant reform to welfare and benefits. This increases the probability that the Chancellor will need to announce tax rises in the Autumn budget to address the UK's increasingly perilous fiscal position.

What is the outlook?

The Fed have so far resisted pressure from the Trump administration to lower interest rates, citing the potentially inflationary impact of tariffs on consumer prices later in the year. However, signs of softness in the US labour market have emerged and we expect this to prompt a dovish turn from the Fed in the coming quarters.

Equities have recovered strongly since the April tariff lows, supported by US corporate earnings and a de-escalation of the tariff war which has reduced recession risks. The European economy should also receive a structural boost from higher German spending. However, US equity valuations leave little room for error should downside risks to growth emerge.
