Monthly Commentary

What happened in markets?

Global equities continued to recover in May as global trade tensions moderated. US equities performed strongly, with the MSCI USA Index returning 5.4%. Large US stocks helped lift the entire market, particularly NVIDIA, who reported better than expected revenue and the stock rose over 20%.

The market environment was more challenging for bonds with yields rising across the developed world which pushed their prices down. UK Gilts returned -1.2% and US Treasuries returned -0.6% driven by a combination of inflation and fiscal concerns. In the US, questions around the national debt rose to the fore as Donald Trump pushes to pass his 'Big Beautiful Bill'.

Elsewhere, the Bank of England cut interest rates, but cited sticky inflation and tariff uncertainty as key barriers to quicker reductions in rates. The ECB hinted at another rate cut in June given that economic growth on the continent is still weak. Gold was marginally weaker over the month, while oil prices were marginally higher.

What is the outlook?

Equity markets have essentially recovered all of their tariff-related weakness, with markets finding relief in the apparent desire of Donald Trump to make deals as well as factors which may have limited his actions, in particular the negative reaction from the bond market. US economic data remains broadly resilient, although much depends on how the recent tariff turmoil has impacted the economy, which should appear in economic data over the coming weeks, and the extent to which trade deals can actually be done.

Despite the uncertainty, we find several reasons to remain positive. The US economy has shown resilience in the face of several shocks in recent years, which may help it withstand any tariff related impacts, whilst corporate fundamentals would appear robust. Furthermore, the large fiscal expansion in Europe should support that region and we believe bonds continue to offer attractive yields, particularly in high yield and emerging market debt.

Recent events have shown the importance of diversification as some investors have begun to question the 'unique' importance of US assets to global investors. Whilst US assets continue to have many unique characteristics, many of which cannot be found in other markets, the extent to which US assets have dominated global investment returns over recent years may not be repeated in the coming years. Our strategies remain well diversified by geography and currency.
